CROWDS WATCHED FIGHTING MACHINES SWING INTO LINE AND START FOR NEW ZEALAND.

(From Thursday's Advertiser.)

Afloat?

The scene of the terrific maneuvers of the American fleet today, as the ships swung into position for up-and-down work, will remain in the minds of all who saw it for many months to come. The fleet was composed of eleven capital ships and fourteen destroyers, and the display of power was truly magnificent. The sun shone brightly, and the sea was dotted with a host of vessels, their great hulls gleaming in the sun. The scene was one of excitement and activity, and the crowd who witnessed it were left with a lasting impression of the might of the American navy.

GEORGIA COMMANDER PREDICTS GREAT THINGS.

Enormous size of the Pearl Harbor project was made evident among the officers of the Atlantic fleet after their inspection of the harbor, and there were many expressions of opinion that the structure would be a decided asset to the fleet. The admiral in charge of the project, Mr. W. F. Frazier, gave an interesting account of the work in progress, and the officers were impressed by the rapid progress being made.
