BRITISH FLYER ON VISIT TO OGDEN RELATIVES DESCRIBES THE WORK OF THE AVIATORS

Army aviation and its attendant personnel are in vogue in England as never before, according to Capt. A. Lloyd, U. S. A., who has been visiting relatives here for some weeks. Captain Lloyd is a decorated veteran of the Spanish-American War, and was present when Maj. Leonard Wood of Ogden was killed at Santiago in 1898.

Captain Lloyd, who is an aviation officer in the Army, says that aviation has taken a prominent place in the war preparations in England. He tells of the enrolling stations that have been established in the various towns and cities to register men who are qualified to learn to fly. He says that the War Department is working hard to get sufficient pilots for its own forces, that it will send a number of airmen to the United States for refresher training, and that the work of the Air Service in preparing men for war is indeed extensive.

The Aeronautic Service

Captain Lloyd says that the aeronautic service is hard at work preparing for the aerial war, which he says will be fought in the United States as in any other war. He says that the Air Service is making every effort to get sufficient pilots and to get the necessary equipment to make it efficient.
