THE KENTUCKY.

The Battle of the Little Bighorn.

(United Press in Washington, D.C., Nov. 29) — The battle of the Little Bighorn was the most important battle of the Civil War. The battle took place on June 25, 1865, and resulted in the destruction of the Confederate army commanded by General P.G.T. Beauregard.

The battle was fought near the town of Lee's Mills, in Virginia. The Confederates were commanded by General Jubal Early, and the Union forces were commanded by General Philip Sheridan.

The battle was fought during the last day of the Battle of Gettysburg. The Confederate forces were defeated, and the Union forces were able to advance toward the City of Washington.

OFFICERS AND CREW.

According to the latest reports, the Vanderbilt was damaged by 120 officers and 550 men of the 1st Confederate Cavalry, which was commanded by General William T. Sherman.

The Vanderbilt was carrying a force of 2,500 men, and was commanded by General Robert E. Lee. The Vanderbilt was proceeding from the South to the North when it was surprised by the Confederate force.

The Vanderbilt was damaged by a shell which exploded in the magazine, killing 120 officers and 550 men.

The Vanderbilt was subsequently abandoned by its crew, and was set afire by the Confederate forces.

The Vanderbilt was subsequently scuttled by the Confederate forces.
