THE SQUADRON FIBES TWO NATIONAL SALUTES.

With GERMAN FLAG TEMPLATED AND TAPS AT ATTENTION WARSHIPS GIVE NAVY'S GREETING.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, the President, and Special Envoy of the President, Commodore William H. McRaven, of the United States Navy, on Sunday morning presented to the German squadron at the close of its visit to this city the most impressive salute of the century.

A ceremony of the utmost dignity and grandeur, the occasion was a fitting one for the visit of the German fleet to America, and an occasion on which the President could but feign to do no less than to obey the orders of his country.

After an address delivered by Commodore McRaven, the President presented the German flag to a German officer, and the last signal was given for the departure of the German fleet.

The German squadron is now en route to the Pacific Ocean, where it will anchor off the coast of California.

THE SQUADRON'S ILLUMINATION.

THE FIRST MEN OF THE EMPIRE OF AUSTRIA VIIILXI become the first men of the Empire of Austria.

On the occasion of the arrival of the German fleet in the harbor of New York, the President, in accordance with the invitation of the German Government, presented to the German fleet a salute of 101 guns, the first of its kind ever presented by the United States to a foreign power.

The salute was given in the following manner: At the signal "Ready," the President presented the German flag to a German officer, and the last signal was given for the departure of the German fleet.

THE FIRST MEN OF THE EMPIRE OF AUSTRIA VIIILXI become the first men of the Empire of Austria.