HOW UNCLE SAM'S BIG BATTLESHIPS ARE COMMISSIONED

The Washington Times Sunday, January 4, 1902

Note to Be Done Than Is Generally Supposed—Hard Work Follows the Official Trip of the Commander

THE MARINE GUARD SALUTES.

T he new battleship Maine has been placed in commission.

That is the way she sounds to the readers across the world.

But there is this fact to be remembered: that the first sound of her class after the great period of silence is placed in active service of the department, that her crew has been sworn in, and that she will fly her flag in the war. That is the way she sounds to the people. But she is not so easily to be described. Her crew is not so easily to be described. Her presence is not so easily to be described. Her significance is not so easily to be described. Her importance is not so easily to be described. Her power is not so easily to be described. Her usefulness is not so easily to be described. Her capabilities are not so easily to be described. Her potentialities are not so easily to be described. Her future is not so easily to be described.

"The new battleship Maine has been placed in commission. That is the way she sounds to the people across the world. But there is this fact to be remembered: that the first sound of her class after the great period of silence is placed in active service of the department, that her crew has been sworn in, and that she will fly her flag in the war. That is the way she sounds to the people. But she is not so easily to be described. Her crew is not so easily to be described. Her presence is not so easily to be described. Her significance is not so easily to be described. Her importance is not so easily to be described. Her power is not so easily to be described. Her usefulness is not so easily to be described. Her capabilities are not so easily to be described. Her potentialities are not so easily to be described. Her future is not so easily to be described."