INTERMEDIATE NAVY.

In Eustis waters, where he made a mark in the war-time, he then re- turned to the Mayflower and spent the afternoon and the early part of night fishing. Sober and content on leaving, long enough to allow the officers to garrison on deck on the forward berths, he retired to his old quarters about 12 o'clock.

The Cricket and Higgs

Churchman Higgs and his Downfall.

In the first instance with the Real Estate Company was made the deposit of the Presbyterian Church. From this company he received $25,000, which was used to buy a piece of land, on the corner of Third and Orchard. The church was completed, and the handsome brick edifice was opened, was probably early in the fall of 1914. The building cost about $10,000, leaving $3,000. The property was assessed at $5,000. The church was worked up to $10,000, and it was a thriving and prosperous concern.

If Frank K. Higgie, president of the Philadelphia (Fifteenth Street) Presbyterian Church, with his family, visited the Caldwell Presbyterian Church, he would no doubt find it a creditable place of worship, and would be pleased with the progressive spirit of the congregation.

It is not suggested that Mr. Higgie practiced these associations for fraud, or that his business methods were in any way dishonest. It is only to be added that the good conduct of the Presbyterian Company is not dependent upon the financial success of any one individual.

But the auditors of the Presbyterian Company were not the only ones who were affected by Mr. Higgie's fraud. The auditors of the Presbyterian Church were also affected by his fraud.

The Presbyterian Church was not the only one who was affected by Mr. Higgie's fraud. The Presbyterian Church was also affected by his fraud.
