HANG OUT YOUR FLAGS TO-MORROW FLEET DAY

In response to a request from The Evening World Mayor Gaynor last night issued this statement:

"I have no doubt the citizens of New York will be glad to celebrate the occasion and display flags at their windows and from their houses."

PANIC IN SWEATSHOPS

Girls and Men Jam Exit in East Side Building Noted for Dangerous Fires.

John Kaven, chief of the New York Fire Department, said today in a conversation with the New York Times that the building in which the fire occurred was a warehouse of the famous dry goods house of Riker, Leavitt & Riker. The building contains about 6,000 yards of cloth, and is situated on the East River Street.

The building is occupied by the Riker, Leavitt & Riker Company, who have about 6,000 yards of cloth in the building.

The fire was started by a spark from a furnace in the basement, and was quickly communicated to the other parts of the building. The flames soon spread through the building, and the fire was fought with great difficulty.

The building is occupied by the Riker, Leavitt & Riker Company, who have about 6,000 yards of cloth in the building.

The fire was started by a spark from a furnace in the basement, and was quickly communicated to the other parts of the building. The flames soon spread through the building, and the fire was fought with great difficulty.

The building is occupied by the Riker, Leavitt & Riker Company, who have about 6,000 yards of cloth in the building.

The fire was started by a spark from a furnace in the basement, and was quickly communicated to the other parts of the building. The flames soon spread through the building, and the fire was fought with great difficulty.

The building is occupied by the Riker, Leavitt & Riker Company, who have about 6,000 yards of cloth in the building.

The fire was started by a spark from a furnace in the basement, and was quickly communicated to the other parts of the building. The flames soon spread through the building, and the fire was fought with great difficulty.

The building is occupied by the Riker, Leavitt & Riker Company, who have about 6,000 yards of cloth in the building.

The fire was started by a spark from a furnace in the basement, and was quickly communicated to the other parts of the building. The flames soon spread through the building, and the fire was fought with great difficulty.