O'Shaughnessy With His Family and a Number of Americans and Foreigners Arrive at Seaport. Tell of Anti-American Uprising.

BY A. M. JAMESON.

VERA CRUZ, April 25.—A signal of relief was offered by every American at Vera Cruz last night when the train bringing Captain Nelson O'Shaughnessy with his wife and child, and the last of refugees from Mexico City pulled into the railroad yard guarded by American marines.

The train was long overdue and the oldest rumors had been circulating among the passengers on the preceding trains which had come through under stricter protection and flying the fifth flag, but all then reporting.

The whereabouts of O'Shaughnessy had been unknown. It has even been reported that he was not on the train, but that he had gone to a port on the west coast to embark there because of the threats that had been made against him should he attempt to come through by Vera Cruz.

All of the refugees who have come in telling stories of their experiences in the anti-American demonstrations that took place in Mexico City when the news of the capture of Vera Cruz was published.

While these anti-American demonstrations were in progress, a tremendous fire broke out in the town and spread to the railroad yards. There was much damage done by the fire, but all were saved, women and children were left unharmed.

O'Shaughnessy was the first American to arrive at Seaport. He was met by a delegation of the seaport people who gave him a grand welcome.

A newspaper photographer decided to take a picture of O'Shaughnessy as he arrived. The picture was taken, but the photographer was later told that it had been ruined.

The United States is now working long hours to get the news of the latest developments.
