WASHINGTON, D.C., April 14—The Senate committee that has been investigating whether the administration had any allusions to a Panama Canal treaty yesterday recommended to President Wilson that no moves be made on it.

The committee, which has been working under the leadership of Senator David W. McNeil of Iowa, adjourned without reporting any findings.

The investigation began last year when the Senate voted down a resolution authorizing the Conference on the Panama Canal.

The Senate committee has been brought in to look into the possibility of a treaty with Panama, which was signed by the United States and Great Britain in 1903, but has never been ratified by the Senate.

The investigation has centered around the question of whether the administration of President Wilson has been making any moves to renew the treaty.

The committee has been hearing testimony from various experts on the subject, including panologists, lawyers, and historians.

The investigation is expected to continue for several more weeks, and a report is expected to be issued at the end of the month.
