WIDEN THE VIADUCT

By U. F. A. Renshaw

IN 1877, a small contingent of army officers, including Lt. Col. U. F. A. Renshaw, led an expedition into China to establish friendly relations with the Chinese government. The officers were greeted with great enthusiasm, and the Chinese people were eager to learn about American military technology. The expedition was successful, and Renshaw was well received by the Chinese officials.

The officers returned to the United States with a wealth of information about Chinese culture, politics, and military strategy. Renshaw, in particular, was fascinated by the Chinese military and its unique tactics. He later wrote extensively about his experiences in China, and his book, "China Under the Military Law," became a classic in the field of military history.

Renshaw's work was highly regarded, and he was awarded the U.S. Medal of Honor for his contributions to military education. He continued to serve in the army until his retirement in 1890, and he died in 1908 at the age of 87. Renshaw's legacy lives on today, and his work continues to influence military scholars and students around the world.
