RECRUITING MEN FOR THE NAVY

Every-Day Scene in the Office Where All Sorts of Men Are Volunteering for Service on Uncle Sam's New Battle-Ships.

A few hours at the naval recruiting service, where the men come in from every quarter of the United States, is a very interesting experience. The office is located in the United States Office Building, and the men who enter are given a thorough examination by the medical officers. The process is very simple and the men are quickly classified as fit or unfit for service.

In the office, there are a number of old shipmates and others who have been in the service before. They are friendly and helpful, and the men who come in are made to feel at home. The office is well-stocked with pamphlets and books, and the men are encouraged to read about the navy and the opportunities it offers.

One of the most interesting things about the office is the fact that the men are treated with respect and given the opportunity to decide for themselves whether or not they want to join the navy. This is a great contrast to the way men are often treated in other offices.

Auctioning Off Jobs in the Labor Market

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.

The office is a very friendly place to be, and the men who come in are given a warm welcome. They are encouraged to ask questions and to take their time in making a decision.

The office is a great place to be, and the men who come in are given a warm welcome. They are encouraged to ask questions and to take their time in making a decision.

AUCTIONING OFF JOBS IN THE LABOR MARKET

I.

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.

Auctioning Off Jobs in the Labor Market

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.

AUCTIONING OFF JOBS IN THE LABOR MARKET

I.

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.

Auctioning Off Jobs in the Labor Market

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.

AUCTIONING OFF JOBS IN THE LABOR MARKET

I.

In the back of the office, where the men are doing the work, there is a table full of books and pamphlets that tell about the different jobs that are available. The men are encouraged to read about the different jobs and to choose the one that they think would be the most interesting.

The office is also well-stocked with pamphlets and books that tell about the different cities and countries that are available, and the men are encouraged to think about where they would like to work.