War Spirit in the Two Capitals.

By FREDERICK PALMER

NEW YORK, March 24th, 1894.

JAPAN and Russia are the two capitals of the world to-day. The recent dispatches from the two capitals have been watched with much interest by the authorities of the United States, and the movements of the great powers have been followed with solicitude by the government of the United States. The two capitals are the centers of the two great powers, and the movements of the two capitals have been watched with interest by the people of the United States.

In Japan, the two capitals are the centers of the two great powers, and the movements of the two capitals have been watched with interest by the people of the United States.

In Russia, the two capitals are the centers of the two great powers, and the movements of the two capitals have been watched with interest by the people of the United States.

The government of the United States has been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest, and the people of the United States have been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest.

In Japan, the two capitals are the centers of the two great powers, and the movements of the two capitals have been watched with interest by the people of the United States.

In Russia, the two capitals are the centers of the two great powers, and the movements of the two capitals have been watched with interest by the people of the United States.

The government of the United States has been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest, and the people of the United States have been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest.

The government of the United States has been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest, and the people of the United States have been watching the movements of the two capitals with interest.