FULL REPORT: LUSITANIA—Washington, May 11—It is believed that the President's policy toward Germany was formulated at the cabinet session this afternoon. The Lusitania tragedy was the sole trading situation.

Every member of the cabinet was present and the meeting did not adjourn until nearly midnight. The President had consulted with his advisors since the torpedoing of the Lusitania.

President Wilson says his speech made in Philadelphia last night was not indicative of his official attitude on the Lusitania case, but merely his "personal expression" of his feeling.

The President's sentence, "There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as being right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right," made in his speech in this city, was spoken through the country that the United States would settle all difficulties with Germany by peaceful means.
