Finnish forces have been fighting for the Petsamo region, where the Finnish Navy has been stationed. The region is strategically important as it provides a rail link to Tornio, a crucial point in the Finnish military strategy.

The Finnish Navy has been actively engaged in the Petsamo region, defending their position and preparing for further military operations. The Finnish military has been using their forces to secure this area, which is a vital part of their northern frontier.

The Finnish military has also been using their naval assets to support their ground forces, providing cover and protection as they move through the area. The Finnish Navy has been instrumental in securing this region, which is a strategic asset for their military operations.

The Finnish military's efforts in this region demonstrate their commitment to defending their territory and maintaining their military capabilities. They are using their forces to ensure the security of this area, which is a critical part of their national defense strategy.