Early Morning Fire Did Serious Damage

This early morning fire was of several nasty blazes that started only this morning when the roof of a former Allied factory, located on the western outskirts of Auckland, collapsed and burned for several hours. The factory was located near Whangarei and was occupied by a number of small businesses, including a workshop and a warehouse. The fire caused significant damage to the building, and the cause is being investigated. The building had been abandoned for several months due to financial difficulties. The fire was initially contained but spread to several neighboring buildings, causing further damage. The fire is believed to be accidental, and no one was injured. The cause of the fire is under investigation by the Auckland Fire Service.
