pess of mensles and searict fever, writes, they did not spread among troops blsouncked or camplng in the war zone in makeshift sheiters, whero there was ut times the utmost overcrowding. Ho ntributes this entirely to the life in the opene nir and to the hyper-oxy genation. It semed to thm that repeated contuct didn not possess the tmportance previousty attributed to it in the commmincation of tagious disenses.
