COMMANDER HENRY M'CREA

The gunpowder explosion in the after turret of the battleship Georgia has once more brought into prominence Commander Henry McCrea of this unfortunate vessel. The accident which caused the death or injury of so many brave officers and men of the ship was the worst of the kind that has ever happened to a vessel under this able officer's command. He was conspicuous in 1901, when in command of the gunboat Machias at the isthmus of Panama, during a revolution in the Colombian republic. His wise and diplomatic conduct prevented injury to American interests there and won him the special praise of the navy department. Commander McCrea entered the Annapolis Naval academy from Indiana in 1866,
