

Phrenologist Tells 1916 Girls How to Pick a Man

United Press Service
 CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 24.—To all daughters of Eve who have leap year intentions, the vocational guide and well known bachelor William J. Kibby, today offers advice concerning the habits, characteristics and dispositions of various sorts of men, which is intended to help girls win their hearts' desires without suffering rebuff in the process. A good deal of what Kibby says is based on phrenology. A man who has thin, straight lips is branded a cold blooded, stony hearted creature upon whom the dearest girl's appeal would have no effect. This sort of man will do his own proposing, run his own wedding and rule his household; and he'll do it more with his head than his heart. But if the man of your choice has full, well-formed lips, Kibby says you may depend upon his capacity for and inclination to, love. He also is susceptible to the right sort of feminine approach. Kibby says the way to tell whether the one you love loves you is by the coloring of the under lip when he is with you. Every human emotion gives some physical demonstration when it is aroused. The evidence that love has been aroused is given by the deep crimsoning of the under lip. If his under lip is perpetually pale when he is with you, he doesn't love you. If it is crimsoning and you want him, grab him quick; he won't run.

A man with a broad, square, massive forehead is a good businessman; he can plan ahead; has good business judgment. If the crown of his head is high and round he is absolutely conscientious, too; and if the back of his head is well rounded out he will love his home, his wife and his children and show them consideration above everything else in the world. The man whose head is flat on top, flat and almost even with his ears in the back and narrow and foreshortened on the front; whose lips are thin, whose eyes are cold, will not make a good husband in any sense of the word, says Kibby. The longer a man's jaw bone, the greater his capacity for affection, according to Kibby. All these things are as applicable to women as to men, in the expert's opinion.

Submarine E-2 After Explosion; Her Commander and Some Victims

Four men were killed and several more injured when a strange explosion occurred on the submarine E-2 while she was in drydock in the Brooklyn navy yard. Whether the cause was some outside agency or a defect in the machinery of the vessel, or a clunder of a member of the crew, will not be determined without a court of inquiry. Joseph was among those instantly killed. Louis Miles and Raymond Otto, both members of the crew, were seriously injured. Lieutenant Charles M. Cook Jr. was in command of the vessel.

There's One Band at Least That Goes to the Firing Line With Men

By WILLIAM G. SHEPHERD (United Press Staff Correspondent)

SALONIKA, Dec. 11.—Our ambulance rushed down the mountain side at French chauffeur speed and into a valley behind hill No. 516, which sheltered us from the shell fire and, at last, we were so far away from the artillery battle we could barely hear the guns.

Valadova, an old Turkish village in southern Serbia, was to be our stopping place. There, in the early evening, General Baillaud, whose brave troops—nearly all of them savages—had fought their way to Krivolak and there tried to reach the Serbians and form a junction with them and, was to receive, with field ceremonies, the order of military merit. But we were too late. The ceremony was over. However, we were astonished to see in a Turkish mosque a French zouave band.

It was the first band that any of us had seen near any battle front. Between the five of us American newspapermen, we had seen every front on both sides. Band music has not much place in this grim war. There were ninety musicians and five drummers and they stood in the mud up to their shoe tops.

"Can't you get them to play?" asked our guide.

"It's the first band we ever saw near a battle field."

"Will you write stories about it?" asked the leader.

We said we would. Whereupon standing in the mud, in the evening dusk that was almost darkness, with the Turkish mosque behind them, the band struck up the song of a certain regiment of zouaves.

Some members of the band sang; they played on their horns in relays; so that we had a chorus, a band and a file and drum corps going all at once. It was a rattling good tune, and as all zouaves songs are about the desert and Egypt and Arabs, these zouaves in Serbia did not sing of Germans or Austrians or Bulgars, but their enemies of other wars. A translation would go something like this:

"Bang! Bang! the Arabs! The wolves aren't far away. Forward! Hustle forward! And let your rifles play."

We gave three cheers for the band and the band gave three cheers for us, the bandmaster made us promise again that we would write a story about how his band played and then we were ordered to get back into our ambulance for the ride to Strumnitza where we were to spend the night. If you hear any one say that there is no music in twentieth century warfare, that men no longer die to stirring tunes, just tell your informer that he is wrong.

The French zouaves have a band and it goes with them right up to the front and it plays while they fight and while they die. There are some things a regiment won't give up, no matter what the war councils say or what the general thinks best. With the French zouaves this thing is their band.

This was on December 2d, and that morning General Sarrail, stationed in Salonika had ordered his forces to retreat. The band had marched down to Valadova from the mountains. Perhaps they did not know their march was part of a retreat, but at the very hour when they were playing and singing so blithely about the Arabs their fellow zouaves in the mountains were packing up their belongings in their dugouts and awaiting orders to retire from the mountain top trenches.

We were taken to a hospital tent at Strumnitza and found a dozen hospital cots ready for us and our military guide. In the center of the tent was a big wooden stove which a huge French soldier kept filling with firewood. The lights were candles.

A canvas tunnel ran from our tent to another, in which lay thirty or more French soldiers whose feet had been frost-bitten.

"We start tomorrow for Paris," said one of them. "but it's a long way. First we ride by train to Salonika. Then they put us on a boat, they tell me, and take us out to a hospital ship. Then the ship travels eight or nine days until it reaches Marseilles. Then we get on a train and ride twenty-four hours until we get to Paris. It seems far, far away, Paris. But I suppose we'll get there sometime."

He was suffering from gangrene following frostbite, and the chances were, the doctor told me, that he may be crippled for life. He was sick and suffering and he had a right to feel that the miles and the days between home and the canvas tent in Serbia would be many and long. Also, we were to hear more rumors of the coming retreat. Our tent stood on an embankment along the railroad track. On the bank across the way stood the little Strumnitza railroad station, where we were to dine.

When we came out of the tent into the darkness a wonderful sight met our eyes. The lights of hundreds of campfires shone on hundreds of tents which had been pitched for the night by the withdrawing troops. We heard singing and a mouth organ.
