U. S. S. CORONIS
(ARL-10)

The Coronis was built in the Boston Navy Yard as the LST 1003, was commissioned June 29, 1944, decommissioned July 11, 1944, in Baltimore, and converted by the Bethlehem Key Highway Shipyard. She will serve the fleet as a repair ship.

Her name is derived from a Grecian maiden of such surpassing beauty that Apollo fell madly in love with her. After a short but passionate love affair with Apollo, Coronis fell in love with a mortal. News of this development was brought Apollo by a raven, then a white bird, and so enraged him that he changed the raven into the black bird which it has been ever since. He then ordered Coronis slain. Just before she was consumed on the funeral pyre, however, Apollo succeeded in rescuing therefrom his about-to-be-born son, who was named Aesculapius. The latter became a physician of unnatural skill, even bringing back people from death for which he was himself slain by Zeus. Aesculapius is considered the mythological progenitor of all doctors and is the source of the word, aesculapes, the symbol of the medical profession.
